Come join the fun as you learn about engineering work opportunities, the fundamentals of electricity, and how electricity and natural gas serve our energy needs, from production, transmission and distribution, to use in your home. Through an interactive environment, girls will be introduced to the world of power generation, sources of energy, and protecting the environment. Feel how much of your energy it takes to light a light bulb and see how power is distributed and traded to different communities. Experience projects for protecting the environment and learn how meteorology impacts power company decisions. Learn how to be safe around electricity. "It's Electric III" will also provide a forum for girls to interface with professional women in many non-traditional fields.
